Don't run away from REITs just yet; educate yourself; learn how to invest in real estate trusts and real estate mutual funds

Oklahoma City, OK – Due to the state of our economy, many people believe that anything related to real estate, the stock market and investing in general is not in their best interest.

While it is true that the market as well as real estate investments have been through a hard time over the past year, Earl E Bird, III, spokesperson for the ReitBuyer.com site believes there are great opportunities for investors today.

Earl said, “First, you have to face the reality. There were a number of real estate investing opportunities, stocks and funds out there that were a bad idea in recent years. Many companies, real estate investment firms and stock market analysts got a little too cozy with things going well all the time. The economic climate started to shift and soon almost every stock, fund, and investment on the market took a nosedive, taking all of us with it.”

Earl explained that as we are coming out of the nosedive many people think it is time to take what they have left and run. Earl said, “This is not the right answer. The correct answer to what you should be doing is that you should jump right back up on the horse, but make wiser decisions the next time to avoid another major fall.” Read articles about REITs at <http://dowstock.blogspot.com/>
